Thyme Hawkins is an associate in Axinn's Antitrust group. She has experience supporting discovery and motion practice in multidistrict litigation, drafting legal memoranda on procedural and substantive antitrust issues, and assisting with case strategy in high-stakes disputes.

Prior to joining Axinn, Thyme clerked for the Honorable Edward H. Meyers of the U.S. Court of Federal Claims and served as a judicial intern to the Honorable Eleni M. Roumel of the same court. She also gained experience as a legal extern at the U.S. Mint, where she worked on intellectual property, privacy, and employment law matters before federal agencies.

Thyme earned her JD from George Mason University's Antonin Scalia Law School, where she served as Research Editor for the George Mason Law Review. She holds a BA in English and Philosophy from Loyola University New Orleans.
