PROFILE

Thomas Hedemann focuses his practice on intellectual property and commercial litigation. His experience ranges across all aspects of litigation from pre-litigation counseling and strategy through fact and expert discovery, dispositive motions and trial. Thomas also has significant appellate experience before the Federal and Second Circuit Courts of Appeals.

In the area of intellectual property, he has represented clients in cases involving diverse technologies, specializing in pharmaceutical cases brought under the Hatch-Waxman Act. In the area of commercial litigation, he has represented clients on matters involving supply contracts, employment contracts, insurance claims and various business torts. Before joining Axinn, Thomas served as a law clerk to the Honorable Alfred V. Covello of the United States District Court for the District of Connecticut.

Thomas is an Adjunct Professor at the University of Connecticut School of Law where he teaches patent litigation. He is also active in the community and serves on the board of Capitol Squash, which seeks to provide underprivileged students with life-changing opportunities through the sport of squash, intensive educational support, mentoring and community service activities.

PROFESSIONAL ACTIVITIES

- Connecticut Bar Association
- American Bar Association, Section of Intellectual Property Law

EXPERIENCE

- Obtained summary judgment of noninfringement on behalf of Alvogen in a Hatch-Waxman litigation involving a generic version of the Exelon dementia treatment patch.
- Obtained a dismissal of all claims against Nautilus, Inc. in a case involving allegations of indirect trademark and copyright infringement.
- Successfully briefed an appeal on behalf of pharmaceutical company Natco involving a generic version of Tamiflu®, obtaining a reversal of the trial court's holding that a later-issued but earlier-expiring patent cannot serve as a double-patenting reference against an earlier-issued but later-expiring patent.
- Represented Fila against infringement allegations involving utility and design patents and, after fact discovery and inventor depositions, obtained an advantageous settlement.
- Obtained summary judgment that the asserted patent was invalid for obviousness, and successfully briefed the appeal affirming the summary judgment on behalf of Mutual Pharmaceutical Company.
- Obtained a favorable resolution for pharmaceutical company Actavis of a multibillion-dollar patent infringement claim by Pfizer relating to a generic version of Neurontin®. Thomas's work on the case included designing and implementing a strategy using Pfizer's admission of unlawful off-label promotion to dramatically reduce the potential damages, resulting in a key ruling on a motion in limine that he authored.
- Obtained dismissal of state court claims and, after fact discovery and inventor depositions, an advantageous settlement on behalf of Custom LeatherCraft in patent litigation involving tool carriers.
- Successfully briefed an appeal on behalf of Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance, obtaining affirmance of the trial court's summary judgment of the plaintiff's breach of contract and related claims.
