United States: Government Antitrust

Highly Recommended

Who’s Who Legal nominee John D Briggs leads the DC office of the rising star Axinn. A skilled litigator who can handle the gamut of antitrust issues, Briggs has taken the lead for the firm’s growing cartel practice over the past two years or so. This year the firm also moved to a far larger DC office, allowing the boutique to grow when opportunity arises.

Google remains a headline client, with the firm helping to guide it through its closed purchase of Motorola Mobility and the FTC’s ensuing investigation of its enforcement of standard-essential patents - although that work has been primarily handled out of the New York office. Briggs has a full docket of his own, advising Tomkins in the appeal of an EU cartel fine, and Independence Blue Cross in a multi-district antitrust class action. Fellow DC partner Michael Keeley is advising Takeda Pharmaceuticals in a monopolization case against Tyco Healthcare. While the firm is involved in several government investigations that remain confidential, they include clients in the health-care, high-tech and consumer goods sectors.

United States: New York

Highly Recommended

At Axinn, antitrust practice co-chair John Harkrider and name partner Stephen Axinn have built a boutique capable of handling the most contentious and complex matters without a corporate practice to lean on. The addition of Morris Bloom, who joined the practice after 27 years at the FTC in January, was a valuable boost for the practice.

Harkrider says 2012 has been “the best year ever” for the firm. The practice was doubly successful at the GCR Awards: Harkrider was named “Lawyer of the Year” while the firm won “Merger Control Matter of the Year” for its work on Google’s acquisition of airfare search software company ITA Software. The firm was also appointed by Google to work on its acquisition of Motorola and in connection with the FTC’s ongoing investigation of standard essential patents.

The Axinn team also advises Red Hat in what Harkrider says is a growing interest in open-source software patent issues. The firm this year guided auto parts makers Affinia Group and WIX Filters towards a settlement ending four-and-a-half-year private litigation. Axinn is also representing engineering company Tomkin in its battle with the European Commission and defending Takeda Pharmaceuticals against monopolization claims.
